HONGKONG, JULY 20, 1867.

THE Legislative Council is summoned to meet on Tuesday, the 23rd inst., at a quarter to three.

It has not yet been publicly stated, but we understand it will be announced in the next number of the Government Gazette, that the seat at the Council vacated by Mr. JOHN DENT has been given to Mr. PHINEAS RYRIE, whose appointment will certainly give general satisfaction. We believe that it is not yet decided who will succeed Mr. H. B. GIBB, who is about to go home. The seat ought certainly not to be left vacant in a Council where the non-official members are so extremely few in number, and, in spite of the fact that there has been a considerable exodus from Hongkong lately, we do not see any difficulty in filling up the vacancy. If there is no one man left who by virtue of mercantile pre-eminence has a claim upon the appointment as a matter of course, that simply amounts to saying that the GOVERNOR is called upon to exercise a little more care in the selection of the third non-official member, than might have been necessary at another period in the history of Hongkong.

THERE may be some chance now that the notion of the Hongkong mercantile community is to be brought to bear upon the consular service, through the instrumentality of the Chamber of Commerce, that a very marked change for the better in the customs of that service may before long be observable. There is room for it, at all events. As an illustration of the way in which British consuls at present submit to Chinese encroachments, almost as a matter of course, we may instance an affair which recently took place at Canton. A Chinaman who had complicated dealings with foreign and native merchants, became embarrassed in such a way that his native creditors were anxious to lay hold of him. He was sought by the agents of the Chinese police and discovered in the house of a British merchant at Honan. The native police had no consular warrant empowering them to make an arrest on British premises, but nevertheless they entered the house, seized the Chinaman, and kept him prisoner there for the space of about thirty hours, before a consular warrant could be obtained. It was obtained at last, the consul obligingly throwing the protection of an authority over an act which was a glaring violation of British rights. To compare small things with great, the act of the Chinese police was precisely analogous to the arrest of Messrs. MASON and STIRRIN in the Trent case; but in the present place the aggressors are the Chinese authorities, those august and sublime persons of whom (naturally looking to the results of former wars, we stand so much in awe), and it was out of the question of course to expect that a British consul would dare to remonstrate with them. Similar instances of consular neglect are familiar to us all, and complaints have been uttered and reiterated by private individuals to no purpose for a long series of years. It is peculiarly gratifying, therefore, to find that the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce goes straight to the vital point in his first speech on the revision of the treaty. Without beating about the bush, and in simple phrases that anybody can understand, he denounces the pet consular sins of "mandarin worshipping" and "dilatoriness." It is a step towards the curing of an evil when it is thoroughly recognised and known to be in existence. Evils like, when they can, to deny themselves, and especially when any public department, body corporate, or particular service, falls into a thoroughly diseased state, it is always passionately eager to deny that there is anything the matter with it whatever. From the Circumlocution office to the Strand Workhouse, the first answer to inquiry always is, that there is nothing in the world the matter, that business, as the case may be, is conducted with the utmost promptitude and dispatch compatible with efficiency, or that paupers are treated with a careful tenderness which makes residence in the "House" a pleasure. So no doubt when the Chamber of Commerce advances its parallels, and besieged consuls begin to be alarmed, there will be vehement denunciations of the unscrupulous falsehoods with which the fair fame of energetic diplomatists has been blackened. The ghosts of unanswered and forgotten letters, however, the echo of old cries against encroachment, which died away in vain when they were first uttered, the manes of grievances which were thought to have been choked, the violated clauses of long-suffering treaties, will rise up against the consuls whenever the question how they have discharged their trust, comes to be fully comprehended at home, and people grow interested in obtaining an answer.

As we say, Mr. RYRIE goes to the point in unmistakable language, and words so spoken cannot but have an effect. As for the slowness of the consuls in answering formal applications for their intervention, that of course springs out of the reluctance to intervene at all, in any sense unfavorable to Chinese, which they all manifest more or less, and which is attributed to them under the phrase "mandarin worshipping." In some cases it may be, no doubt, that a man in the position of a consul in China, loses after prolonged intercourse with Chinese officials a portion of his European vigor of intelligence, and is more or less reduced to an Asiatic state of mind in which the profound imbecility of positively reverencing Chinese mandarins is possible; but such cases we should imagine are rare. The lethargy and indisposition to take the British view of any question manifested by so many consuls, and commonly supposed to arise from mandarin worship, does, we fancy, in the majority of cases spring from that anxiety to keep on good terms with the Legation at Pekin which we spoke of the other day. The Government at home does not want to have difficulties in China to bring before Parliament, the Minister at Pekin wants to please the Government by rubbing on somehow without a disturbance, and the consuls are taught that they must try and keep quiet in their little spheres too, and pooh-pooh grievances so far as possible. It is a dead lock exactly like that in the old nursery rhyme, and to be overcome in the same way. In the instance referred to, it will be remembered, the fire eventually began to burn the stick, the stick began to beat the dog, the dog began to do something else, and a variety of interesting results ensued, so that, finally, if we recollect the primary object in view correctly, the old woman got over the stile. Now, the British merchant must begin to burn the stick, or, in other words, to agitate in the Chamber of Commerce, and the Chamber of Commerce will beat the dog, and eventually the ascending chain of cause and effect will lead to the vindication of the Treaty of Tientsin, and the actual freedom of trade from the illegal restrictions and obstructions which have been thrown in its way.

The second sitting of the present sessions was commenced yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, when the following jury were called and sworn:—Geo. Crichton, Robt. Walker, E. R. Smith, W. Kirby, H. Nicaise, R. Clark, and Fred. Grobin.

THE SUY-TZING-WAN MURDER.

Lee-a-see, Lee-a-chow, and Lee-a-cheong were placed at the bar charged with the murder of one Ho-lin-shin, a stone-cutter, on which charge they were arraigned and pleaded not guilty.

The Attorney-General briefly stated the case. On the evening of July 8th, about 7 o'clock, the deceased Ho-lin-shin was sitting on the step of his house at Suy-tzing-wan, in company with a number of his friends and family, when the three prisoners, who are residents of the same village, living but a short distance off, came up and attacked the deceased, the third prisoner saying as they were beating him, "I will beat you dead; what are you talking to that woman," referring to the wife of Ho-lin-shing, who was of the company sitting outside deceased's house. Each of the prisoners was armed with a stone-cutter's chisel, with which they struck a great number of blows with both ends using them like knives and stabbing as it were the deceased man in various parts of the body, from his shoulders down. From the effects of this fearful hammering the deceased man expired in about half an hour.

The first witness was one Ho-muck-seen, who was present during the affray and had been a witness from its beginning, in fact, it had taken place in front of his house, the deceased and others being outside sitting in conversation when the prisoner came up. He deposed to all the facts as at first stated in the opening of the Attorney-General.

Dr. Murray deposed to the appearance of the body of the murdered man the next day, when it was brought to the Civil Hospital. There were no external signs of any violence having been used on the body with the exception of one slight wound just behind the chest. The spleen was found ruptured and the abdominal region infused with blood. This wound produced death. A rupture of the spleen would have been produced by a blow from such a blunt instrument as one of the chisels shown in court. The rupture might be easily produced without the sign of an external bruise. The spleen of the Chinese, as a general rule, was much more easily ruptured than that of a European. Witness did not remember ever to have seen during the whole course of his practice a case of the spleen of a European having been ruptured by a blow that did not make an external wound. Assuming that a person had been struck a great number of times with such an instrument as one of these chisels, the appearance of the body of the deceased did not justify such a conclusion as having been the fact in this instance.

Ho-a-luck was next called, and stated that he was a stone-cutter, and resident of the village of Suy-tzing-wan. He was an eye-witness to nearly the whole affray. The body of the murdered man was dragged past his door by the three prisoners, while they were still beating him. The affray was commenced in front of the widow's house. He was too far away to hear what was said, but he saw the fight begin. He ran to the rescue and found the second prisoner holding the deceased's head down by his queue, while the others were beating him with a chisel.

W. Williams, P. C. No. 46, deposed to being called about half-past eight on the evening of July the 8th from his station to Suy-tzing-wan, where he found the body of the deceased man lying only a few feet from the house in which he found the prisoners. He knocked at the door of the house and was admitted, when the first witness pointed out to him the three prisoners, whom he took in charge. He conveyed the body to the station, and next morning to the Civil Hospital.

The Attorney-General then submitted this evidence to be the case for the prosecution and proceeded to sum up. He had no idea when he came into court in the morning what could have been the cause of this murder, and it had only accidentally cropped out in the evidence that jealousy was perhaps its cause. He had immediately sent to the village to have the woman, if she could be found, brought to the court it had been however impossible to find her, and that jealousy was the cause of this murder there was in his mind no doubt. This woman was no doubt one for whom the third prisoner had formed an attachment, and seeing her in conversation with the deceased man he became enraged, and no doubt it was in avenging this that the attack was begun and continued to a fatal end. The third witness had said that the third prisoner passed his house without anything in his hand, that he had gone to his own house, and returned armed with the chisel, and accompanied by his two companions, the second and first prisoners. This appears like the deliberate act of a man who knew what he was doing, and had meditated upon his actions.

In defence, the prisoners denied altogether that they had committed this crime or in any way been concerned or connected with it. They drew attention to the discrepancy in the evidence of the first and second witnesses. They had in a number of points contradicted each other, both as to time and place. There was a row and a fight, and this man might have been killed during this row, but they had not been concerned in it.

The Chief-Justice then proceeded to address the jury. He went at great length into a comparison of the evidence first as given by the second and third witnesses, who claimed to have been eye witnesses, and, secondly, as to its being borne out and corroborated by that of Dr. Murray and P.C. Williams. Where there was such wide difference in the narrative of one transaction by two men was either of them to be believed. The first witness had positively said that the first blow was struck in front of his own house; the third that it was struck in front of the widow's house, the first had seen over 120 blows given by the three prisoners, and the third had seen only 35, and he again contradicts himself by saying that he could not see how many times, the deceased was struck since, it was too dark. Could a body pummelled and beaten as it must have been had it received such treatment as the two Chinese witnesses describe, have presented the appearance afterwards that Dr. Murray deposed to. In fact, could these witnesses be relied upon for truth, if they could not there was no proof of murder against the prisoners. His Lordship continued at very great length strongly in favor of the prisoners, pointing out to the jury a verdict of manslaughter in case they were unable to reconcile the evidence of the two Chinese witnesses.

After an absence of ten minutes, the jury returned with a verdict for manslaughter. His Lordship said he would pass sentence on the opening of the court this morning.

Walter Stone, who on Thursday pleaded guilty to stealing $7.00, from one Gilby, was placed at the bar for sentence. The court called for Gilby, who, by the way, appeared to be very ready and willing, if not anxious, to give evidence against his own shipmate; and asked him if he believed the story the prisoner had told in extenuation of his offence. He said he did not. His Lordship then remarked that he was sorry to see so respectable and intelligent a one who killed him is the first prisoner. He followed him below to the cabin and killed him there; I myself saw it. I stabbed the man who first struck the captain with a sheath-knife (produced). He fell down and died. When the captain was killed in the cabin, I saw the gunner there and some Chinese at the door. I point out the first and second prisoners as being present, and I saw the tenth and eleventh coming out of the cabin. The first was killing, the captain and the second outside. All were armed, some with knives and others with axes. The axe produced belonged to the carpenter. I did not notice the carpenter about the decks, or any of the other prisoners. I did not see the boatswain at all during the affray. I was very much frightened, but knew perfectly well what was going on. When the captain was wounded I was bleeding and giddy, and went below also. During the attack on the captain the mate was standing by the mizzen-mast. I cannot say whether or not he was wounded, but think he must have been. He was standing straight up and did not offer to assist the captain, nor did he speak a word. Presently I saw him lying down by the mast nearly dead. I did not see who wounded him. When I went below I saw the apprentice boy lying in his berth badly wounded. I did not see him die. When I went aft the man at the wheel was wounded and had fallen down. I only saw the one Chinaman on the poop all the time, and that was the man whom I killed. I have no idea of the reason of this outbreak. Nothing unusual had taken place previously. The crew and passengers were always well treated, and I never heard any complaints from any of them. The Manila portion of the crew were always on friendly terms with the Chinese. I never saw any of the female passengers in the captain's cabin, nor the captain or officers enter the house assigned to the women. I myself was never in that place either. On the morning after the meeting everything was going on as usual, and all hands at their duties with the exception of the first prisoner, but I heard no orders given personally to him. I cannot say why he should not turn to as well as the rest. I cannot say who was the chief among them.

Fernando Septimo, another seamnie belonging to the Jeddo, who seemed very ill and weak, was the next witness called. He only spoke very little Spanish and seemed only to be able to converse in some horribly outlandish patois that no one else could understand. At length, with much difficulty, something like the following was elicited from him. On the fourth of July I was sleeping on deck, and between eleven and twelve o'clock was awoke by a noise on the poop. On the 9th I received another wound, and heard a great noise on the poop. It was the second prisoner who stabbed me. He gave me three wounds. The seamnie Dyonisio was calling out, and I ran aft to his assistance, when I was again stabbed by the same man. I then fell down insensible on the quarter-deck. I think I must have remained insensible for about twenty minutes. When I recovered I saw the two first and two last prisoners running forward. I went towards the cabin where I saw the Chinaman who was killed and the one who jumped overboard. The gunner and the other three seamnies were in the cabin, and I asked them where was the captain. They said he was killed. In all I saw six Chinese scudding about the decks. I saw the second man with a knife, but I am not sure about the rest. When in the cabin I heard the boatswain order the body of the mate to be brought down. I saw the large chopper-knife now in court in the cabin. The boatswain had it in his hand. I saw no blood on it. I saw the boatswain in the cabin, but not on deck. I have no idea of the cause of the attack and saw no reason for it at all.

The coroner wished to know why the prisoners had been given in charge, and not the carpenter, steward, cook &c.; whether there was no suspicion against them also. The boatswain and gunner were recalled, and could not very well explain the matter in a satisfactory manner.

The court then adjourned till four this afternoon.

ASSAULT.

Kitchel, a Malay seaman belonging to the P. & O. Co.'s steamer Niphon, was charged with assaulting and wounding a washerman named Lee-a-sin, residing in Hollywood-road.

Prosecutor stated that at about half-past eleven yesterday, a Malay woman came, and seated herself down on one of his stools which was standing outside the door. He requested her to go away, and took the stool from her, upon which he was assaulted by four or five Malays who were near. Prisoner struck him on the head with a bamboo and wounded him in the arm with a knife, the others also struck him. An assistant who was in the shop at the time, called a constable, on the approach of whom the Malays all ran away, but prisoner was apprehended.

The shop assistant corroborated the fact of the assault, and the Sikh constable deposed to apprehending the prisoner, and in spite of a protest by the latter that it was merely a wordy quarrel, he was sentenced to fourteen days' hard labour and a whipping of fifteen strokes.

ANOTHER "GAMIN."

Chun-a-kai, a small boy, who said he was sixteen years old, but certainly did not look it, was charged with stealing a jacket, the property of Ling-a-yuen, shopkeeper residing at East Point.

It appeared by the evidence that complainant had put out his jacket to dry in the road opposite his house, when prisoner, who was passing by picked it up and ran away. He was pursued and caught with the garment in his possession.

Prisoner appeared to be a regular well-known pick-pocket and general young scoundrel. He had been brought up before the court on a previous occasion and dismissed, but he was a well-known "gamin" in his locality. He was therefore sentenced to one month and a flogging of fifteen lashes.

One of those pests, a notorious street-gambler, was next brought up, and his career was temporarily stopped by his being fined $10 with the option of fourteen days imprisonment.

Coroner's Inquests.

THE "JEDDO" MUTINY.

This inquiry was resumed yesterday at the magistracy.

Demos Barabos, seamnie on board the Jeddo.—On the fourth instant I turned—in at eight o'clock, it being my watch below. At about midnight a person came and stabbed me in the chest, but I cannot say who it was. I was sleeping on deck, and after the man had wounded me he went away. I felt giddy and sat down. I then heard a noise on the poop, and went forward, where I picked up a bit of firewood to defend myself. I then saw three or four Chinese come running forward. I went to the main-mast and called out to my shipmates to assist me, as I was wounded. No one answered me and I ran aft to the poop. On getting to the cabin I saw my shipmates all lying down, and complaining of being wounded. I then armed myself and we kept watch. The next morning we went on deck. I know all the prisoners. The two last were passengers and the rest part of the crew. I saw the first and second prisoners running along the deck after I had been wounded. Plenty of Chinese were knocking about some lying down and some sleeping. I can form no idea of the cause of the mutiny. There was some flogging after we left Penang, but I do not know whether that had anything to do with it or not. I think the Chinese wished to rob the vessel. I cannot speak the Chinese language or understand it at all. The crew were well treated, and I saw no signs of the outbreak before it took place. The crew always obeyed all orders in the usual manner. I know the axe produced, but not the knife; the axe belonged to the carpenter. (An axe and a horrible weapon which might be rightly called either knife or chopper produced.) The carpenter is not one of the prisoners. He is on board the vessel.

Inspector Daly explained that he had arrested all the men who had been pointed out to him. He understood the carpenter was among the prisoners, and no one of the crew but the steward had been left on board.

I did not see captain alive or dead after the mutiny!

Mr. Ryrie then appeared, and after application to Dr. Murray, who was present, wanted to know how it was that a gang of coolies were not allowed on board to clean the ship. That the police would not allow any one to do anything. A long immoderate conversation then took place between Mr. Ryrie, Dr. Murray, and Inspector Daly.

I saw the mate lying wounded in his cabin, and also saw the apprentice boy wounded, but do not know who had struck him. I did not see any weapons in the hand of the first two prisoners. When aroused I saw four men moving about. Never saw men running about the deck before. I did not call for assistance after being wounded, as I nearly lost my senses.

A juror remarked sotto voce "And not recovered them yet." "I got my weapon from the boat swain; he gave me a bayonet. There were two bayonets and two swords. On the 9th a vessel hove in sight and assisted us.

Dyonisio Verral, seamnie on board the Jeddo.—On a certain Wednesday, but I forget the date, I was at the wheel between eleven and twelve at night. A Chinaman came up on the poop towards me and wounded me in the chest. The man is dead. He died because another seamnie killed him. Another seamnie, Francisco Aesis, came to my assistance. I fell down, and when I got up saw a Chinaman also wound the captain. It is the same man who is dead. He was killed after he went from the poop on to the main deck. He left the captain and went off the poop, and was killed by another seamnie. (This witness looked very ill and was suffering from the effects of his wounds in addition to being obstinately, helplessly stupid.) When I was wounded I fell down. I got up again and seeing none of my shipmates on deck, I went down to the cabin. (Witness then began to contradict himself, and it required considerable moral suasion and patience on the part of Mr. de Souza, who still acted as interpreter, to get out of him what he really meant. He was a stupid-looking fellow at the best, and what little sense he might once have possessed, appeared to be completely scared out of him.)

Examination continued.—After I was wounded I fell, but got up immediately and the Chinaman went away uttering an obscene word, and saying "I will kill this foreign devil." He then went and struggled with the captain, after which he went below. A seamnie who heard me calling for assistance came to him, while he was struggling with the captain and killed him. I then joined my shipmates who were in the cabin, all wounded, and we kept watch. I heard the boatswain call the carpenter to take the wheel after I had left it. My shipmates wished to fight, but the boatswain advised them not to do so as they were all wounded. I did not see any of the prisoners doing anything at the time. I only saw the one man who is killed. When I was wounded and fell, I heard a great noise and confusion in the cabin; and when I went down I saw my shipmates all lying there. I asked for the captain and they said he was dead. I do not know where the boatswain was during this time. I did not see him. I saw the chief-mate on deck while I was at the wheel. He was asleep and I did not see any one do anything to him. (Finding the utter impossibility of getting anything out of this witness, who kept contradicting himself every moment, he was let go, Mr. de Souza expressing it as his opinion that he was not in his senses.)

Francisco Assis, also seamnie on board the Jeddo. On the night of the fourth instant at ten o'clock I left the wheel and went on the look-out. The captain sung out to me to keep a good look-out ahead for ships, as there were several crossing our track. Between eleven and twelve I heard a noise aft and ran towards the poop. On my way I was wounded by the second prisoner, who was armed with a small knife. I saw the captain struggling with a Chinaman. The captain was crying in Chinese, "What are you doing?" The Chinaman said "Beat this foreign devil." I do not speak Chinese well, but understand a few words. I went to assist the captain and received another wound, as did also the captain. The man who first wounded the captain is dead, but the man at that bar, but being there he must administer the law which the prisoner had transgressed. He hoped it would be a lesson he would profit by in the future. He would sentence him to three months imprisonment at hard labor.

The court then adjourned until this morning at ten o'clock, when the business of the sessions will be completed.
